Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Marketing Growth & Communications Intern role at Sezzle. Lifecycle communications is where I have deliberately specialised: CRM, email marketing and lifecycle messaging, with Klaviyo flows worked through outside work to deepen the platform side. This role is that same work across email, push, RCS/SMS and in-app.

Sezzle's mission is to financially empower the next generation of change-makers, and the app carries that past the payment plan: Sezzle Anywhere, the rewards programme, and Money IQ, where people earn rewards for financial-literacy content. Each reaches a different person at a different moment, so the audience, the timing and the message should follow. At BBVA Argentina I explain a financial product in plain language to customers with very different levels of digital confidence, so financial empowerment as a communications problem is already my daily work.

What I would bring to building, QAing and reporting on those campaigns:

- Copy produced at volume, on a schedule: 15 posts a month planned, written, designed in Canva and published across Instagram and Facebook over three consecutive summer seasons. At Inmobiliatica.com the posts were judged on enquiries generated, not reach.
- Claude already in the workflow: three marketing products built and shipped with Claude Code, including a five-tool platform on the Gemini API whose copy generator returns three variants of a campaign message. Claude is my daily tool for research, first drafts and reporting.
- Numbers I can say something about: Google Data Analytics certificate in progress, SQL practice on marketing and CRM tables of customers, campaigns and purchases, plus my own dashboard on real BigQuery (GA4) data.

What I would be learning here is the platform itself: I have not worked in Braze, and I have not built email templates or landing pages inside a marketing automation tool. I have built, tested and deployed web front ends myself, so the build-and-QA habit transfers, but an ESP is not the same thing. What I would not be learning is compliance: at BBVA what I can tell a customer is bounded by the bank's criteria, the same instinct as clearing an asset with legal.

My Diploma in Oral Communication and Rhetoric (UTN) is where I learned to treat clarity as a craft, and I work in advanced English and native Spanish. I would like to earn the right to propose the campaigns, not only build them, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
