Dear Sezzle hiring team,

I am applying for the Product Marketing Associate, Rewards role. Rewards and loyalty are retention problems, and retention is the direction I have deliberately pointed my work in: a banking CRM I run every day, and a data certificate I am part-way through.

Sezzle treats engagement as product rather than decoration, and the numbers say it works: the Earn tab drew close to five million visits in under a year, and shoppers who use it generate over 20% more revenue per active user. Getting a person to adopt a feature and then keep using it is what I do every day at BBVA Argentina, where I move customers onto the bank's app and online banking. Your mission is to financially empower the next generation; mine, at branch scale, is sitting with one person until they can run their own money from their phone.

What I would bring to an Earn and rewards portfolio:

- Adoption and engagement as a daily job: over 100 customers a week guided onto BBVA's digital channels and over 50 queries a week resolved with retention as the priority, which is where friction points surface before a survey finds them.
- Evidence over intuition: I am on module 5 of the Google Data Analytics Professional Certificate (SQL on BigQuery), and I built an analytics dashboard with Claude Code over a real BigQuery GA4 ecommerce dataset reporting KPIs, trends and audience breakdowns; Claude is already how I research and draft.
- Copy, and launches I have run myself: 15 posts a month across three summer seasons as a community manager, conversion-oriented copy for a real-estate platform, and three products I took from scope to live URL alone. Go-to-market only at that scale, but I planned the launch, watched it in public, and changed it instead of defending it.

On the one to two years you ask for: I have been at BBVA Argentina since January 2026, and I held community manager and digital marketing assistant roles from January 2023 to March 2025. None of that carried a product marketing title, and I will not describe it as if it had: it is marketing and customer-facing work adjacent to product marketing. Your careers page says you believe in talent over tenure, so I would rather put the work on the table than the job titles. I have no hands-on Braze, only the banking CRM and Klaviyo flows in active, self-directed learning, and on user research and NPS I would bring the analysis half and learn the program instrumentation on the job.

I would welcome the chance to talk through what I would measure first on one Earn and rewards product, and what I would test before changing anything.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
