Dear DEPT hiring team,

I am writing about the Manager, SEO Strategy role. To be direct: I have not run technical SEO audits or worked hands-on in Ahrefs, Semrush, Botify or Screaming Frog, so this is a stretch application. I am applying anyway because I live in Mar del Plata, where the hybrid setup fits exactly, and because the part of the role I can already do well, turning data into a client-facing recommendation, is what I do daily at BBVA and did for three seasons as a Community Manager.

At BBVA I run daily operations on the bank's CRM and resolve over 50 customer queries a week, reading account data correctly and explaining it to a customer in plain terms under time pressure. As Community Manager I planned content calendars, published on Instagram and Facebook through Meta Business Suite, and adjusted each cycle based on what reach and engagement actually showed. Neither is SEO, but both are the same discipline your role needs: read the data, judge what it means, and turn it into a decision someone acts on.

- Data literacy: SQL, spreadsheets and data visualisation from the Google Data Analytics Professional Certificate, in progress.
- Content and channel execution: calendar-based publishing and creative trafficking in Canva across three seasons.
- Client-facing communication: advanced English for teams abroad, plus a UTN diploma in oral communication and rhetoric.

What drew me to DEPT specifically is how the role is framed: leading clients through the shift from SERP management to Generative Engine Optimization, inside a company that describes itself as fifty-fifty tech and marketing and launched its own AI practice, DEPT/AI, in 2023. That is a steep learning curve, and it is the kind I have a track record of climbing: I currently work full time, study for a Marketing degree and complete a data analytics certificate in parallel, so ramping up on a new technical stack under real deadlines is familiar territory, even where the subject itself, technical SEO and AI search, is new.

I would welcome the chance to discuss how I could grow into this role in Villa Crespo or Mar del Plata.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
