Dear Félix team,

I am writing about the CRM Manager role for New Products. Driving adoption and repeat usage across a growing portfolio, from remittances into lending, wallet and payments, is exactly the work I want to build my career around. At BBVA I run daily operations on the bank's CRM with a clear focus on retention and helping customers adopt digital products, and I want to bring that focus to a company built around lifecycle and engagement.

Here is how my background maps to what this role needs:

- Retention on CRM: I manage daily CRM operations and orient over 100 customers per week through digital-channel adoption, the same lifecycle logic that turns a first product into repeat usage and cross-sell.
- Data-driven decisions: I am completing the Google Data Analytics Professional Certificate (SQL, spreadsheets, visualisation) to measure segmentation and results against evidence, and I am comfortable growing into BigQuery-backed audiences.
- Latino customer context: native Spanish and advanced English put me close to the community Félix serves and the tone that makes remittance and lending communications land.

Félix's mission is what makes this role compelling. Building the financial ecosystem for the Latino community in the US, starting with WhatsApp-based remittances and now extending into credit and new products, is a rare chance to apply CRM to something that genuinely improves people's access to money. Converting remittance users into broader Félix users, at the right moment, is precisely where a strong lifecycle programme earns its keep.

I will be honest about fit: this builder role expects deep hands-on Customer.io experience and years of experimentation with holdout groups and incrementality, and I am earlier in my career than that. My CRM work so far has been operational and retention-focused rather than a full lifecycle-automation remit. What I bring is genuine retention and customer-data experience, the analytical grounding to reason about segments and results, native fluency in the market, and a fast, detail-oriented approach to learning new tools. I would welcome the chance to make the case in person.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
