Dear Improvado RevOps team,

I am writing to apply for the Marketing Operations Analyst role. The work sits exactly where I am heading: I run CRM operations and client retention every day, and I am training in analytics to make marketing decisions with data instead of intuition. I am available to work US time zones from Argentina, one to two hours ahead of Eastern.

Here is how my experience maps to what you are looking for:

- CRM & lead lifecycle: at BBVA I run daily operations over the bank's CRM, manage client records, and guide over 100 clients per week across the retention lifecycle.
- Marketing analytics: Google Data Analytics training in SQL, spreadsheets and data visualization, applied to reading metrics and turning them into next steps.
- Conversion-oriented marketing: hands-on with content and campaigns built to generate inquiries and conversions, not just reach.

What draws me to Improvado is that it unifies marketing and sales data from hundreds of sources so teams can act on one source of truth. That is the direction I am moving toward: making the systems reflect reality and feeding clean data into decisions. I am direct that HubSpot, GA4, GTM and formal attribution modeling are not in my toolkit yet; they are a natural extension of the CRM and analytics work I already do, and I pick up tools quickly and on my own.

I would welcome the chance to bring my CRM discipline and data focus to your RevOps team and grow into the full marketing operations stack.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
