Dear BrandBuilding.com hiring team,

I am writing to apply for the Digital Marketing Intern role. I am drawn to roles that ask me to work across channels instead of specializing in one, which is how I have built my experience so far.

Here is how my background maps to what you are looking for:

- GA4 and analytics: I built and shipped a marketing dashboard that pulls real GA4 ecommerce data from BigQuery, tracks KPIs and trends, and generates an automated daily executive summary, hands-on comfort with GA4 beyond a nice-to-have.
- Content, social, and conversion marketing: three seasons as a Community Manager planning and publishing content for local brands, plus conversion-focused marketing at Inmobiliatica.com, content built to generate inquiries, not just engagement.
- Data and CRM: I work daily on BBVA's CRM, guiding over 100 clients a week and tracking resolution metrics, while completing the Google Data Analytics Professional Certificate (SQL, BigQuery).
- Curiosity and ownership: outside my job, I have built and shipped three independent marketing tools with Claude Code, including a competitor auditor that researches and compares real company websites and a buyer-persona generator for audience research, the kind of personal-project work that reflects how I like to learn.

The one area where I am not yet hands-on is running paid campaigns directly: my social and content work has been organic rather than Google Ads or Meta Ads management. That is exactly why a role spanning multiple channels, instead of a purely paid-media seat, is the right fit for where I want to grow next.

What draws me to BrandBuilding.com specifically is the portfolio model: supporting marketing across many ecommerce brands at once, with the scale of a $50M annual ad spend behind them, means seeing how channels, data, and creative connect instead of optimizing one in isolation, the same instinct behind my own dashboard work. That mix of autonomy and room to grow into more ownership is exactly what draws me to the role.

Building and shipping three products on my own has taught me to ask questions early and figure tools out on the job rather than wait for a perfect setup. I would welcome bringing that same proactive habit to your team.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Bianca Dondero
